Marking up a draft

A reviewer reads a draft with a highlighter and a red pen. Everything on this page is plain Markdown with a few classes on spans; the colors and lines come from the stylesheet.

The highlighter

The committee met on Tuesday and agreed to move the launch to the first week of March, subject to the results of the final test run. The budget stays as planned. The highlight follows the text from one line to the next and covers the spaces between the words, and a code span such as the setting `launch_date` sits inside the same band.

The red pen

The report ~~will be~~ is due on Friday, and the figures in the appendix ~~has~~ have to be checked again. Please look at the word recieve in the second paragraph, and note that this claim needs a source.

An underline ends where the text ends: a correction that runs to the end of a line and on to the next is not drawn out into the margin, while the spaces between its words are underlined.